

The Dotted Line: How To Prepare For Potential Defect Claims

Tuesday, September 29, 2020

Marion Hack was quoted in a Construction Dive article discussing the importance of contractors documenting their work processes. According to Marion, subcontractors also should maintain detailed records of damages to their work so that they can recoup the money to fix it from the party at fault. “If you claim damage to your work, you have got to make sure you promptly report it as a back charge to the owner or to whomever is responsible. I see a lot of contractors lose the opportunity to recover money because they have not properly documented the back charge,” she said.

To read the full article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Construction Law

Industry Sectors

- Real Estate & Construction