

'Stop Treating Us Like School Kids': Worker Tensions Over Returning to Office Bubbling Over

Monday, June 6, 2022

David Barron was quoted in Law.com discussing how workers are unhappy about returning to the office and how they are playing a legal card. “Many are arguing COVID-related reasons, but it doesn’t have to be,” said David. “It could be some other type of disability that would warrant a reasonable accommodation to work from home.” He said some workers seeking a more permanent work-from-home arrangement are seizing on disability protections in the Americans with Disabilities Act.

To read more of this article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Labor & Employment