

Facing dual challenges of work and home-schooling, more women are sacrificing their careers

Monday, October 5, 2020

Debra Friedman spoke with NBC News about women being forced to make the choice between caring for their children or prioritizing their own career during the COVID-19 pandemic. “One of the long-term impacts of this pandemic may be a reversal of some of the important gains women have made with respect to increased career opportunity and pay equality,” said Debra. She added, “they’re forced to make choices between career and family, often resulting in a career setback.”
