Some jurisdictions hold true to the old sentiment that “the King can do no wrong” (sovereign immunity) and severely curtail the ability to pursue a claim against the government. Some states freely allow claims while most states are somewhere in the middle.

In this webinar, Daniel J. Luccaro and Bryan R. Campbell will examine:

- How different jurisdictions view a potential claimant’s ability to pursue a claim against a government agency
- The policy reasons behind divergent views, common exceptions, limitations to government liability, and what a lawsuit against a government agency looks like
- The differences in approach and strategy with presenting claims to government agencies
- The importance of recognizing the issues
- Tools to help navigate the pitfalls
- Real-life and hypothetical case studies used to illustrate the importance of properly handling these claims, while providing important resources to assist those faced with claims against government agencies
