

What Law School Should Teach, But Often Doesn't

Friday, September 9, 2022

Josephine Bahn was quoted in an article published by Law360, which discusses the lessons attorneys wish they had received in law school but learned on their own in the workplace. "It's called the practice of the law for a reason," Jo said. "You learn by doing, by researching, by putting all of the skills that you learned in law school together, and by putting that final piece of learning the granular levels of law into action."

To read more of this article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Construction Law