

Claims Against the Government [Claims Management Magazine]

Friday, June 24, 2016

Marisa Saber and Leslie Hulburt, members of Cozen O'Connor's Subrogation & Recovery department, discuss how to successfully bring tort or contract claims against the government in Claims Management Magazine.

In the article, Marisa and Leslie highlight how the rules for pursuing local, state and federal government are set up in a way where potential litigants have to overcome threshold obstacles and abide by special notice and claim submission rules. Suing the state or federal government is usually a two-step process involving claim forms, an investigation, and the litigation stage. In some cases, the government will be immune from liability.
