

New York City Attempts to Implement Vaccine Mandate

Thursday, December 9, 2021

John Ho spoke with World at Work about New York City's vaccine mandate for private employers that operate in the city. John said the New York City mandate is more likely to survive legal challenges because "municipalities generally have broader authority to enact public health laws." "Historically, when state vaccination requirements have been challenged in federal court, courts often have determined that such mandates are within its public health powers," he said.

To read more of this article, click here.

Related Practice Areas

- Labor & Employment