As events of the past few weeks have shown, the pandemic muted but did not end workplace violence. The trauma of the last year, coupled with a return-to-work, requires employers to renew their vigilance and properly assess workplace threats. Join us for this timely webinar where we will examine current best practices in workplace violence prevention and intervention, including components of the workplace violence prevention program, tips for legal counsel working with workplace threat assessment programs, and active shooter response options. We will look at workplace threat assessment teams, workplace violence policies and processes, and other critical components for preventing active shooter incidents, stalking, and other targeted violence in the workplace.
